Wrongful Death

What is Wrongful Death?

Wrongful death occurs when the negligent or deliberately harmful actions of an individual, company, or entity causes another person to be killed.

Types of Wrongful Death Accidents

1. Premises Liability
2. Automobile Accidents
3. Medical Malpractice
4. Product Liability
5. Elder Abuse/Nursing Home Abuse

Premises Liability

Premises liability law pertains to injuries, including slip and fall injuries, caused by unsafe premises. The law requires that property owners maintain the safety of their property. When they fail to do so and their failure causes injury to a visitor, the property owner can be held liable for the injury.

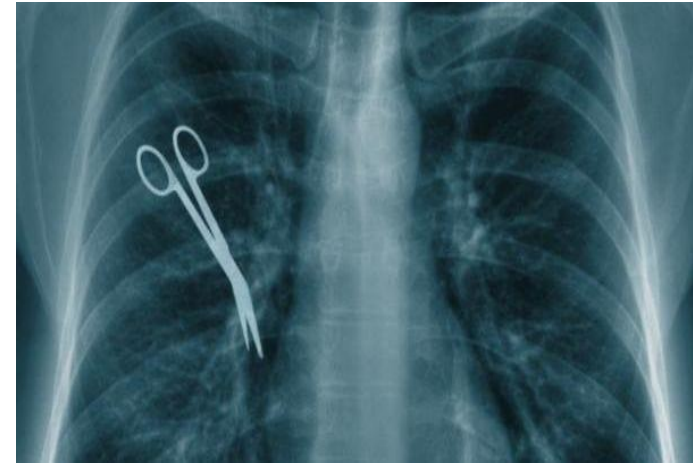

Automobile Accidents

It happens when a person died in a Car, Truck, Motorcycle accident due to recklessness and carelessness of a driver. Other Cause of road accident is Defective Roads, if there is any problem in construction of road you can sue them.

Medical Malpractice

It Happens when someone you love has suffered a severe personal injury or if you have lost a member of your family to wrongful death due to a healthcare provider's negligence. Surgical Errors and Diagnosis Error are some of the examples of Medical Malpractice.

Product Liability

According to the doctrine of product liability, any or all parties involved in the design, manufacture, and marketing of a defective product may be held responsible for whatever injuries result from the use of the product. These parties must take reasonable measures to ensure that a product does not pose any unforeseeable hazards to consumers when used for its intended purpose.

Elder/Nursing Home Abuse

In elder or nursing home abuse and neglect cases, it occurs when the elderly patient dies as a result of neglect, abuse or inadequate treatment or care. If your loved one has died due to negligence of nursing home abuse you can sue that elder care facility.
